HI GANG!

Poor old Braker Turtle – has he had a week of it! It all started when... no... I won't tell you since you can read all about it on page 16. By popular demand – Jasmin, the little Japanese Princess is back in a brand new adventure this week!

If that's not enough excitement for one issue, there's four fabulous cut-out outfits for Woolma Lamb on page 8, Digby inherits a fortune on page 11 and there's some great Fabuland prizes to be won on page 18!

NEXT WEEK...

We're all at sea... with stories, fishy games and fun... so be there!

GANG PROJECT!

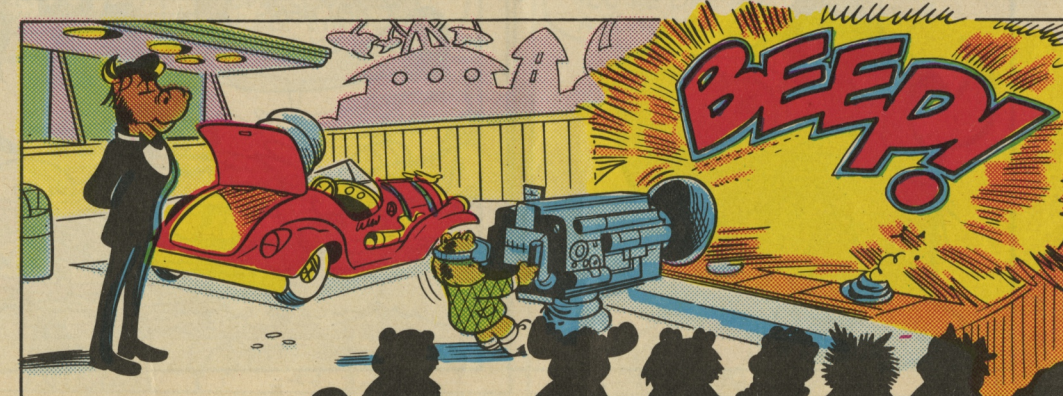

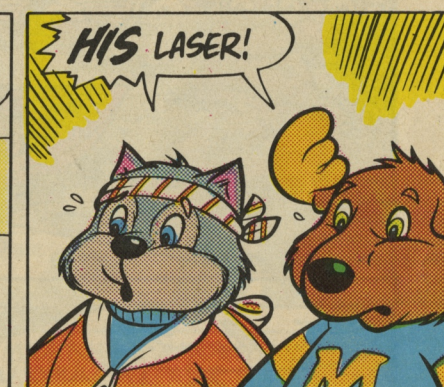

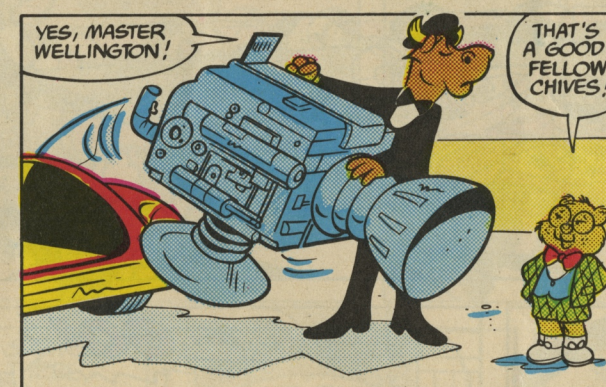

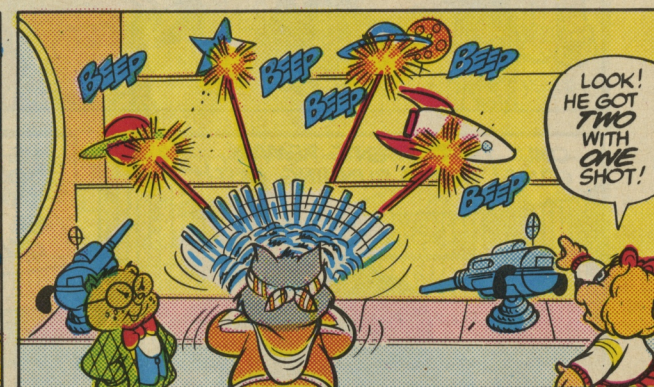

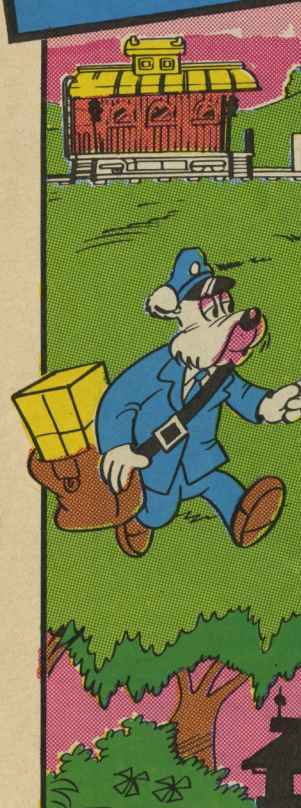

Have you ever noticed how people use their hands to express themselves when they talk. Here's a challenge for your gang. Set yourselves some time when you are not allowed to talk or make any noise at all! You must try to "talk" to each other just using your hands or gesturing. It's very difficult – but great fun!

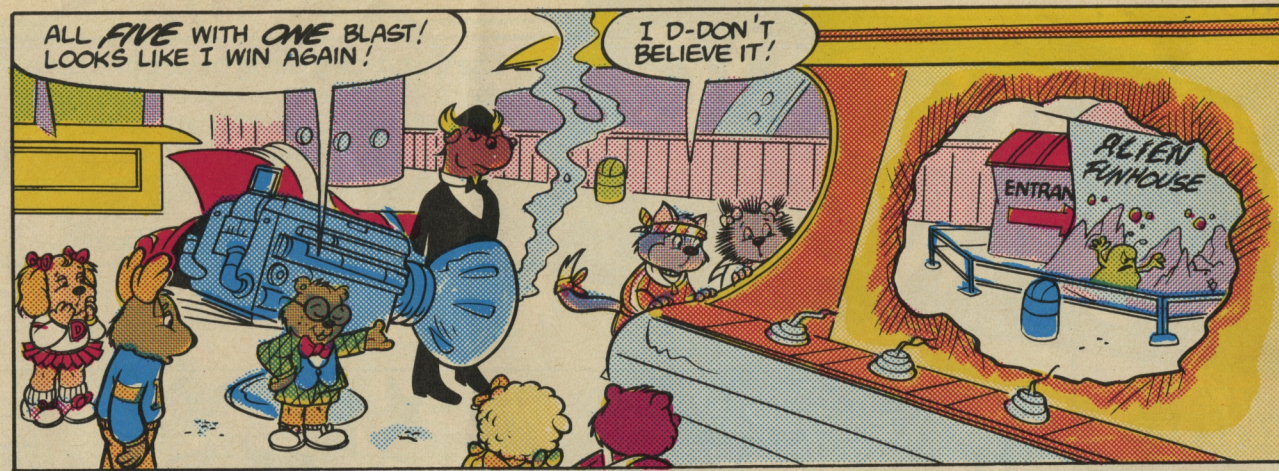

If you would like a birthday request in your favourite comic, then simply write your name, date of your birthday and how old you'll be on a postcard and send it to us, not later than 7 weeks in advance to:

The Jungle Snowmen by Caroline Wylie. Illustrated by Clive Jenkins. Published by Hodder and Stoughton. Price: £3.95.

One day something very strange happened in the jungle. It is something that the jungle animals will never forget and yet it was so unbelievable that now it seems that the whole thing must have been a dream. It started snowing. And that was just the beginning. The snowflakes burst into life and built themselves into lots and lots of chunky snowmen—each with a black bowler hat sitting firmly on their cold white heads. Why had they come? The answer is as magical as the snow itself!

WOOLMA'S WARDROBE

There is nothing Woolma Lamb likes better than a new outfit. But first you must stick this side of the page on to card then cut around the dotted lines for your sturdy model of Woolma Lamb. Now you can cut out her great new outfits!

Everybody needs a friend
No matter what they say,
Its lots of fun to Get Along,
To read and sing and play.
Help each other all the time
While you live and grow,
Getting along can be such fun,
Be happy as you go.

Braker's Books

Story by John Gatehouse

"Hello, Braker," Montgomery greeted his friend one morning. "What's the matter? You're looking sad." Braker did indeed look upset as he sat on the wall outside his house.

"My Dad's told me I've got to get rid of my books," he explained, leading Montgomery upstairs to his bedroom. Braker is something of a bookworm, which means he likes to read a lot.

"Yipes!" gasped Montgomery as he looked at the hundreds of books piled up all around the bedroom. There were books on the table, under the table, on chairs and the tops of cupboards, inside the wardrobe where Braker's clothes were kept, and even inside the bedroom handbasin! "I can see why your Dad wants them moved. There's hardly enough room for you to fit inside!"

"But I don't want to get rid of them," Braker said sadly. "I like reading them."

Montgomery felt sorry for his friend. "Don't worry," he told him. "The Get Along Gang will help you."

It was Lolly who came up with the idea. "Let's move them into the Caboose. Then we can build a shed nearby for Braker to store them in."

"Hold it!" said Braker, putting the brakes on the idea before it had even got off the ground. "We don't have any wood to build a shed."

"My uncle's a carpenter," Bingo told him. "He always has wood left over from jobs. He'll give us all we need."

"Wait!" Braker cried before the Gang could go to work. "We should work out who's doing what job."

Montgomery sighed. If they listened to their friend they'd never get the job done. "We'll work that out later," he said. "Now come on!"

Bingo, Rudyard, Dotty and Montgomery collected the wood from Bingo's uncle while the others started moving Braker's books to the Caboose. It took a long time and many trips before all the books had been moved.

"Phew!" That was hard work," panted Rocco as they rested outside the Caboose.

"Yes, and now we've put all Braker's books inside the Caboose how do we get in?" Flora muttered. It was true that the Caboose was now full to overflowing with books.

This is when every thing started to go wrong. The Gang began to argue about who was doing what job. "I knew we should have sorted it out before we started," groaned Braker as he watched his friends fighting.

"I'm hammering!" said Zipper.

"No, I am!" snapped Rocco.

"I'm using the saw," Rudyard said, taking it out of the tool box.

"It's my Dad's saw," Montgomery glared, snatching it from Rudyard's paw. "I'll use it!"

It wasn't long before everyone had argued with everyone else and they had all stormed off in a huff leaving poor Braker alone.

"It's my fault the Gang have argued," he sighed sadly. "It's best if I move my books out of the Caboose. I'll just have to throw them away after all." With that he filled up the Gang's cartie with books and pushed it towards the rubbish dump.

Later on, the others met in the street. They were already feeling guilty about deserting Braker.

"We've let him down," Montgomery said. "He wanted out help and we end up squabbling."

"I'll run back and tell him we're going to work together this time," Zipper said and dashed off back to the Caboose. But when he got there Braker was gone and so were all the books.

"He must have thought we didn't want his books here," groaned Lolly when the others arrived.

Woolma frowned. "We must find him before he does something daft."

Rudyard pointed to a trail of books that lay on the ground. "Look, Braker must have dropped these as he took his books away. If we follow them they should lead us to him."

At the rubbish dump Braker had run into trouble. He had piled his books into a giant pile and was about to leave when he saw four weasels burying something in the ground nearby. When the weasels had gone he went back to have a look.

"They're up to no good," he thought as he dug where he had seen the weasels working. He soon pulled out a large white sack from a hole in the ground. "Bank money!" Braker gasped, looking inside the sack. "They must be bank robbers!"

"That we are," cackled a weasel who was standing behind him, holding a spade. "It's lucky we came back 'cos now we can dispose of you before you blab to the cops!" Braker went cold with terror as the weasel lifted up the spade to hit him!

The Gang had reached the dump and saw the weasels threatening Braker. "We must do something!" cried Montgomery. They all ran towards where their friend was. The weasels saw them coming. "Get 'em!" snarled the leader as he took a swipe at Braker and missed. Braker had dodged the blow just in time!

Before the weasels could do anything the Gang charged into the stack of books, pushing them over. FLUMMP

The books fell on top of the weasels, trapping them all!

"I knew your books would come in handy one day!" laughed Montgomery.

"The weasels had robbed the Green Meadow Bank this morning and were hiding the money here so no one would find it," Officer Growler explained as he took the dazed weasels away in the police van.

The Gang received a reward from the bank for returning the money. With this they bought Braker a brand new shed to store all his books in. "You deserve it," they told him as they helped to move all his books inside.

GREEN MEADOW SPORTS DAY!

Dear Montgomery,
On Thursday 27th June, our school, Wakefield Girls High, had a Sports Day. I thought why don't you and the rest of the gang have a Sports Day too... or even the whole of Green Meadow. Mr Hoofnagel could do the refreshments! I wonder who would win the sprint?

Heidi-Suzanne Bancroft.

Great idea Suzanne! I've got a feeling that a certain cat, who happens to wear red shorts, would win the sprint, don't you agree?

MORE JOKES!

What does Woolma hold on to at ballet?
A BAAHR!

What is Montgomery's favourite food?
Chocolate mousse!

Fay Stanley.

Which fish are musical?
Tuna!

What goes Tick Woof Tock Woof?
A watch dog!

Carrie-Anne Lane.

Where do you find a hedgehog with no legs?
Where you put it!

Joseph Cockerell.

What is white, furry and smells of peppermint?
A polo bear!

Nicola Booker.

TREND-SETTER!

Dear Montgomery,
I really love your magazine and I get it every Saturday! I wish your television programme was on again. I have three little Get Along Gang figures and two cuddly ones. My favourite ones in the Get Along Gang are Portia and Bingo. Could you ask Portia what she does in her spare time?

Joanne.

Portia's favourite pastime, apart from having fun with the Get Along Gang, is setting trends. She knows, long before anyone else in Green Meadow, which fads are going to last and which ones are going to pass. She is the first one to try out a new style, and by the time everyone else is onto it, Portia's already onto the next one. Sometimes she invents new fads accidentally (like the time she put her shirt on backwards when she was late for school) and is pleasantly surprised when others follow her unintentional lead!
